New Cervical Screening Training Website!

We are delighted to announce that the new Cervical Screening Training website has been launched. The site provides information on all courses that we provide with the opportunity for electronic booking. News, links and many resources are also available from the site.

An email has been sent to all leads to inform them. Please book all future training through the website.

New resources from Jo's Trust

These 2 resources were developed by Jo's Trust, with input from local cervical screening trainers. One was developed for women with learning disabilities and the second film shows what is involved in screening and reflects the diverse population.

Healthcare at its very best - with a personal touch

Certificate in Contraception and Sexual Health

Following the success of the pilot course we are pleased to announce that future courses will be arranged. Please keep checking our website for new dates.

Risk prediction programme launched to provide one test for all women-specific cancers

This research aims to make individualised risk predictions for cancer available to women for the first time, by looking for molecular markers in cervical cells - taken from a regular smear test - that can predict the risk of them developing any one of four cancers: breast, cervical, ovarian and womb. These cancers alone represent 47% of all cancers in women, and amongst them are cancers with a 5-year survival rate of just 40%. A staggering 516,000 new cases are diagnosed in the EU each year. For further information go to www.eveappeal.org.uk

Nursing Times Finalist

We are delighted that Jill Fozzard, Training Facilitator, and colleagues from the Sexual Health Service at New Croft have been selected as finalists. The submission is for work they have done with women who have learning disabilities. The awards will be announced on the 12th November.
